Introduction

A crisis can be a catalyst to transform a failed business into a growth opportunity. A failed business that can be saved by a crisis can be a winner.

If the business is already a winner, a crisis can become an opportunity if leadership is able to see the potential in the crisis. A crisis is a moment in which a company reaches a new understanding of their current situation, and a new opportunity can be created.

A crisis can also be an opportunity for leaders to rethink how businesses are operated, and how they can be more effective. Leaders must be able to think about the long-term adaptability planning. It's time to rethink how businesses are operated, and how they can be more effective.

Leadership requires the ability to create a new vision for a business, and it requires the ability to adapt and shift their business leaders used this forced opportunity for adapting and shifting their business.
